PSYCHIATRY: Interpersonal and Biological Processes seeks an integration of interpersonal and biological perspectives in the formulation and testing of important ideas in psychiatry and mental health, addressed to serious students of problems in these fields, to those who are exploring and using interpersonal and biological treatments, and to those who are searching for broadly applicable and effective solutions to the major unsolved problems. It is designed to present the highest quality quantitative research, vivid reports of qualitative data, illustrative case reports and clinical studies, synthetic theoretical essays, accounts of scientific meetings and colloquia, surveys and critiques of scientific literature, and reviews and commentary on published work. PSYCHIATRY is focused on contributions that foster a thoughtful integration of biological and interpersonal reasoning.

Manuscripts are submitted to PSYCHIATRY with the understanding that they have not been published or accepted for publication elsewhere, in whole or in part, and that they are not being simultaneously considered by any other publisher. The receipt of manuscripts is acknowledged promptly, and a decision is reported to the author as rapidly as a careful evaluation procedure permits. Articles are accepted subject to editorial modification in accordance with the journal's particular style and requirements. Any such editorial changes are made in consultation with the author.

Manuscripts should be double-spaced throughout and should be submitted in quadruplicate. They should be accompanied by a corresponding disk and a stamped, self-addressed manuscript envelope.

Since PSYCHIATRY is an interdisciplinary journal, articles submitted should be so written as to be communicative to readers outside the author's special field. The manuscript must begin with an abstract of not more than 200 words that summarizes the main questions and findings of the study or observations reported. A biographical footnote, in the indicated style, is required, and it is the author's responsibility to verify all references and quotations. The reference style should adhere to APA format. Authors should avoid using abbreviations and initials (such as "OCD" for "obsessive compulsive disorder") as well as trade names for pharmacological agents.

Authors must also provide information about how consent was granted for obtaining data from research subjects or from patients who are described in clinical reports. If consent has not been obtained from patients in ongoing or in completed treatment with the author or a colleague, the author must describe why consent was not obtained as well as a description of how the manuscript protects the confidentiality of the therapeutic relationship. A cover letter to the editor should provide information on consent or confidentiality or indicate where in the manuscript this information is given.

This journal subscribes to the current policies of the NIMH Consortium of Editors for the publication of data on the social class, ethnicity, and gender of research samples. Please consult the statement describing this policy before submitting a manuscript. Except where explicitly stated, the journal conforms to the Uniform Requirements for Manuscripts Submitted to Biomedical Journals, which can be found at <http://www.ama-assn.org/public/journals/jama/sc.6336.htm>.

Permission must be requested for lengthy quotation, reprinting, or other reproduction material published (or accepted) by PSYCHIATRY.
