Monitoring Muddy Emotions

List each of the emotions you notice and rate its intensity on a scale of 0–100.

Consider all of the emotions you are experiencing.

Are any of them a direct response to the current situation?

- Yes
- No

Explain:

Does the intensity of the different emotions seem to fit the situation?

- Yes
- No

Explain:

Are any of the emotions you're experiencing providing you with a clear message?

- Yes
- No

If so, what is the clear message being sent by the different emotions? _____

Clarifying Emotions Reflection

What is the situation you are currently in?

What emotions are you experiencing? How would you rate their intensity from 0 to 100?

Emotion: _____ Intensity: _____

For each emotion you notice, consider whether it seems to be a clear response to the current situation. If you think it is, please describe here.

Clarifying Emotions Reflection (page 2 of 3)

For each emotion you notice, consider whether it is providing you with a clear message. If you think it is, please describe here.

Consider the following questions to see if there may be factors present that are making your emotions muddy:

Are any of your emotions linked to anything in your recent or distant past? If so, describe how here.

Are any of your emotions linked to anything you might be worried could happen in the future? If so, describe how here.

Clarifying Emotions Reflection (page 3 of 3)

Do you feel like it is “bad” for any of these emotions to be present? Are you judging yourself for having any of these emotions or responding in a self-critical way? If so, describe here.

Are you tangled up in any of your emotions? Do you feel defined by any of them? If so, describe here.

Are you taking care of yourself? Sleeping, eating right, getting exercise, making time for fun? If you have been neglecting yourself in some of these areas, describe how here.

Monitoring Control Efforts

Situation	Emotion	Do I have an urge to feel something different? Yes/No	Intensity of the urge 0–100	Am I trying to distract myself? Yes/No	Am I trying to push my feelings away? Yes/No

Clarifying Emotions Assessment (page 2 of 2)

Factors that may be present and making emotions muddy

- Emotions related to past events
- Emotions related to what could happen in the future
- Critical/judgmental thoughts about emotions
- Attempts to avoid, suppress, or change emotions
- Getting tangled up in emotions

If you identified factors that may be muddying your emotions, you may find it helpful to explore them here and to consider how mindfulness and acceptance strategies may help. (This assessment is a short version of the Clarifying Emotions Reflection you completed in Chapter 3. If you feel stuck, you may want to go back and work through that form. You can also read on in Chapter 12 for some tips as to what to do if and when you get stuck on one of the steps.)

What options do I have for taking action?

Values-Consistent Actions Reflection

Are there choices I could make here that would give me a short-term sense of relief? For example (check off those that apply):

- Help me calm down
- Please other people
- Help me avoid conflict
- Make me feel less guilty
- Distract me from pain
- Other: _____

If so, are there any costs to those choices? What are they?

Is my focus turning toward something that is meaningful or turning away from pain? Describe.

- How attached am I to the possibility I may feel less pain if I make this choice?

- Are there any costs to that choice? If so, what are they?

Values-Consistent Actions Reflection (page 2 of 2)

Are there choices that I could make here that are likely to influence other people who are involved? What are they?

- If so, how tied am I to that outcome? Am I accepting the limits of control?

- Are there any costs to those choices? What are they?

Are there choices I could make here that could possibly make it less likely something bad will happen? What are they?

- If so, how tied am I to that outcome? Am I accepting the limits of control?

- If so, are there any costs to those choices? What are they?

Are there choices I could make here that are consistent with what matters most to me? What are they?

- Is my unwillingness to have certain thoughts or feelings holding me back? In what way?

Consider using the Clarifying Emotions Assessment to enhance your willingness.

Values-Consistent Actions Reflection —Additional Questions

Are there external barriers to the actions I want to take? What are they?

- Can I address these barriers through problem solving? How?

- What strategies can I use to accept the understandable pain connected to barriers that I cannot immediately address?

- Can I find new values-consistent actions within these contexts that will add meaning and satisfaction to my life? If so, what would they look like?
